The Cockey-Lawson House is a two-story brick house built about 1815 with considerable alterations in the Italianate style about 1850-1870, and recent additions still on-going in 1993. The five-bay northwest elevation has an arched and fanlighted center entrance flanked by 4/4 windows. A central pediment with a fanlight in the roof was probably an addition along with the bracketed Italianate cornice, and a one-story polygonal bay on the east gable end during the mid-19th century. A one-story porch on the west gable end was enclosed with casement windows, possibly in the early 20th century. In 1993, a two-story addition filled in the angle between the main section and the two-story rear wing. The house was probably originally built by Williams Cockey, who purchased a large parcel from Thomas Cook, then running the mill nearby which became Price's Distillery in the mid-19th century. Cockey may have also been in business in the mill. By the early 1870's, the house had been acquired by James U. Lawson and several generations of the Lawson family worked at the distillery while occupying the brick house. The Italianate alterations may date from their purchase of the property. The Lawsons retained the property until 1945.

The Cockey-Lawson House is a two-story brick dwelling erected about 1815 on the northeast side of Price's Distillery Road about 1/4 mile from the intersection of Green Valley Road near Urbana, Frederick County, Maryland. The site is about 1/4 mile from the Frederick-Montgomery County boundary and is geographically nearer to Hyattstown, Montgomery County, than to Urbana. The principal elevation of the house faces northwest, with a two-story rear wing on the southeast side, and several non-contributing agricultural outbuildings, the remainder of the original farm complex, located on the south side of Price's Distillery Road. The house has recently been altered by a large addition in the angle between the main section and the wing and rehabilitation work is still in progress. The date of the house is based on architectural evidence, land records, and historical maps.

The house has a five-bay main elevation with the walls laid in 7:1 American The center bay is emphasized by a pediment which was probably added in the bond. late 19th century. The roof is composition material with interior end chimneys and an Italianate cornice with paired brackets has been partially removed on the northwest elevation, leaving the unadorned frieze in place. The full cornice is still on the west elevation and the rear wing. The cornice was added during the period about 1850-1870, probably with the central pediment and a one-story polygonal bay on the east gable end. This bay has a slate roof, suggesting that the main roo. The central entrance has an arched fanlight and was also originally slate. The windows are 4/4 with flat arches. These sidelights, with an 8-panel door. windows appear to be replacements of the period 1850-1870, possibly replacing the original windows of about 1815 which were more likely 9/6 or 6/6. In the central pediment is a fanlight window. On the west gable end of the main section is a flat-roofed, enclosed sun porch with casement windows. The date of the porch is unknown, but it may have been originally an addition of the mid-19th century as an open-sided feature and was enclosed in the early 20th century. The two-story rear wing has been obscured on the east side by the recent addition which fills in the angle between the wing and the main section. A projecting modern bay window has been added to the south end of the original wing. The interior of the house was inaccessible for this survey.

8. Significance

Prepare both a summary paragraph of significance and a general statement of history and support.

The Cockey-Lawson House is moderately significant for the architecture of the principal facade and the mid-19th century additions in the Italianate style which indicate a period of modernization which probably corresponded to a change in ownership. The house was apparently built by William Cockey, who purchased a 471-acre tract, part of the "Addition to Grommet's Prospect" from Thomas Cook. Cook established the mill near the house which became Price's Distillery in the mid-19th and Cockey's deed specifically excludes the water rights Cook had previously established for the operation of his mill. The connection of Cockey with the mill is not yet clear, but further research may show that he was involved in its The title chain is also obscure about the date of acquisition of the roperty by John H. Lawson, but Cockey is still shown as the owner on the 1858 Bond John H. Lawson and others sold the house and 298-1/2 acres to James U. Lawson in 1872. The Lawson family owned the distillery during this period, along with Levi Price, and its prosperity was probably the source of the extensive alterations to the house in the Italianate style. The Lawsons held the property until 1945. In 1910, an equity sale was ordered, and the advertisement listed a wealthy farmstead of the late 19th or early 20th century:

"This farm is improved by a substantial brick dwelling house containing ten rooms, a fine bank barn, wagon shed, corn crib, and necessary outbuildings; also by two tobacco houses and a blacksmith shop. This farm is conveniently divided into six fields under good fencing with running water in every field but one. Twenty acres of the farm is woodland, well set in fine timber. Mr. John Lawson residing on the farm . . ."
